A new anti-ducate motor car lighting derice has been invented by A. Kelway Blancher, an Englishman. It consists of five magnifying glasses placed direcily under the leady of the rat. Huminated by electricity, acetylene or other means, the lamp throws strong direct rays along the road beneath the relicie. throwing the car lote clear tiew from all sides. The front and bottom lenses are clear, the off this and back leases are red, and the rear-side leases green The light is passed through a small trapdoor in the floor of the car, and it is glained to be a supple and effective method. The photograph shows the new enderson lighway derice in service. This picture was taken at night and shows her completels the car is illuminated by the new light.

They are now of Roman Catholic falth and a church tower marks the alte of each village, oxen and other domestic animals have been introduced; but the crude huts, the homespun dress, the primitive method of agriculture, belong to centuries long hast. At harvest time farming in this roof garden of the world is most interesting to the traveler. In throubing the grain the men drive the oxen about in a circle, encouraging the poor animals by yanking their tails; in winnowing, the grain and chaft are blown out through a horn, that the wind may separate them. A crooked stick is used in plowing, but what the Quichua farmer lacks in modern machinery he makes up in the decorative headdress of his axen. In contume these mountainvers are most picturesone. Throughout the Andran highlands the headenvering

PART L.—Living in the small English village of Darbury, old-fashloned and sedate place, Barbara Stockley, daughter of a widowed mother, is soon to celebrate her marriage to Huxh Rochdale, rich and well connected Harbara is adventurous, and has planned, with an aunt, an airplane trip to Australia. Major Alan Croft, famous as an aviator, is to be the pilot. At her first meeting with Croft Barbara is attracted by his manner and conversation, different from the cut-and-dried conventions of her small town.

They set out, Harbara, her aunt, Croft, and a mechanician. Word in a few days comes to Darbury that the plane is missing and its occupants believed lost.

PART IL—Croft and Barbara, after the wreck of the alrelane in a furious storm, reach an apparently uninhabited island in the Pacific ocean. The other two members of the party had perished. The two castaways build a shelter. In Croft's absence harbara is attacked by a black man, evidently a savage. Croft rescues her.

Croft discovers a party of blacks, evidently reconnolitering, but they leave without attempting to harm the pair. Croft recovers his serial from the wrecked plane.

With the aid of the wireless Croft works on the superstillions fears of the natives and an attacking party is series off, apparently in abject fear. Secure from immediate dadger, Croft and Barbara settle down to make the best of things. Croft sirendy has recognized the charm of the gri and fears the outcome of their situation, lie gets a message to the native chief, ordering him to visit them. He comes, Croft, who has traveled in many savage parts of the world, is able to talk with him.

As the lowered berself into the milmmeriae rippies, she resolved to follow up this talk, to press through this this piece of wall; such by a process of subtle sings, win the friend thip which all at once seemed extreme ly desirable.

But, as usual, disappointment and her efforts when nout sto assulted the wall. The gap proved to be firmly patched up even barred across. It only anger the bace did wonder . . .

The old chief appeared keeping a ate distance, seen after receiving the White man's message. But an entbrook of stransse was reging in the telliement; therefore, much to the Having an erisinal from him that the trade was carried on with other islands. that no ships came to the south. Croft threw himself with renewed zest into the building of a new hut. As if to drown all thought, he worked incessantly, sometimes moodly silent, sometimes seeming keenly to enjoy the new comradeship that had established liself, little by little, between them. A month or more passed before the native chief's wrinkled black face appeared again, two warriors in attend-

Croft thrust a hand through her arm when they joined the natives; and again she was conscious of the old magnetic stimulation of his personality, which had sustained her during the first terrible nights and days.

Fear and curiosity formed the chief elements of the unusual animation in the natives' settlement. Great bustle of preparation was in progress-spearing of fish, gathering of fruit, by men; while the smoke of many-fires, ascending into the still air, indicated the occu pation of the women.

Had not the chief ordered unlimited feasting to pacify the stomachs, music to delight the senses of the Terrible Ones? Ballmaka, the stone god, looked incongruous among garlands of tralling vine and the feathery leaves of tree ferns. Before him stood the sacrificial table—a massive tree trunk stripped of its back, upon which was piled a heap of dried sticks and undergrowth.

Balbuaka ever demanded a sacrifice at full moon, and the moon was now at the full; and the people trembled, for the selection had been reserved for the Great White Chief, and who could tell what ruthless crucities be might not exact?

Meamaa sat by her sick child and wept. People shunned her hut, although it was not yet proclaimed tabu. She knew well what was in their minds. With no superficial civilization causing them to hide their natural instinct of self-protection, they openly hailed this possible substitute for an offering. Some of her friends even taunted her with their hopes, if she appeared outside.

"A-na! o-na! Ween, Meaman! The little one is with thee for the day: but, a-na! with the setting of the sun he shall become as the smoke curling up to the nostrila of the Great White Chief! Weep, Meamaa!" Yet she was one of themselves, and the child a favorite. She thought none the worse of them: they knew not the art of wearing double-faced masks. Meanwhile, the dreaded visitors were being escorted with some dignity through the intricacles of the thick inland vegetation. Although obviously terrified, the old chief bore himself well, mointaining a natural dignity with his humility. Chimabaliol, emboldened by a friendavorture and into w which had long troubled him.

"Where dwell thy tribe. O Mighty Chief?" he inquired, with some treplds tion. "No white warriors were visible around thy dwelling upon the coral shore. Do they, perchance, live in the rocks, or in holes deep within the carth?"

For a moment the other was mystified. Then, remembering the natives' tribal instinct, he selzed this advantage and stood up, waying his arms as if to include the universe.

"My tribe," he explained equivocally, "is over present; it ever surrounds us! Armed and ready at any moment to come to our aid, it waits, though invisible to mortal eye. Earthly habitation is not necessery for the White Chief's warriors." The old native glanced about un easily, a look of alarm overspreading bis face. His sense of drama rising with the situation, Alan stretched out

"Peace, O Chief! Have no fear? They will not touch thee without my command.

"I and my tribe would be friendly to thee and thine. Why hast thou been hestile unto us? Why has thou so tempted the wrath of the gods who sent us hither, by greeting us with spear and arrow?"

Chimbahol looked up, startled by this burst of vehement English. Croft controlled his indignation, making further inquiries, which elicited the an swers he expected.

"They were all men," the native told blm. "After they had killed, they fled away to their cances. They were covered with dark clothing, each like unto each. When they spoke, they spoke strangely-here," he stroked his throat, "and their words were like the sounds ninde by one whose stomach Is too full, and who must return somewhat lying therein."

This vivid description of the Teutonle tongue convinced his listener. "Ha! The d-d Hung! I thought as much." He again interpreted for the girl at his side. "Now let me think. We must turn this to our advaninge. It proves what we talked about that evening by the river; doesn't it? The effects of our 'civilized' war were felt even here?" He ran his fingers through his hair, watching Chim abahol thoughtfully.

"And thy Vow was of vengeance upon all white men?"

"Even so, Great Chief." "H'm! . . ." His fertile brain speedily conceived a plan which, if wild, was yet founded on fact. "Chief," he began confidently, "those white men who murdered thy sons were an enemy tribe waging was against my tribe. And their ways were treacherous, their weapons terrible!" Chimabahol was unusually intelligent for a native. Quick to grasp the meaning of this stranger, who spoke a dialect so much resembling his own, n fiash of comprehension leapt into his

A smile lit un Croft's face. If not strictly accurate, this sarmise would suit his purpose admirably.

"Even so! And, seeing thy tribe of t different hue, they were filled with fear and cried, saying flet us siny them "-he had a vague impression of Biblical eloquence, but it translated very well-"And they slew all thy sons in their fear; then ran to their boats. For their bearts are as the fermented breadfruit long stored in a plt."

Pausing to refresh his erntory, he proceeded to picture their mutual enemy in furth colors, assuring the chief of their downfall. This gave him spother insufration.

The cause of the deserted appearance of the place was soon clear. Chimabahol led his guests around the western ontskirts, of the little settlement, toward the belt of verdure reaching down on that side almost to the Ingoon. Here, in a large clearing used for council chamber, with carpet of moss, walls of lofty trees, roof frescoed with blue and green tracery, was assembled apparently the entire tribe.

Upon the white chief's appearance a walling murmur arose, interspersed by the occasional frightened cry of a child. At a shout from their chief, they all fell upon their faces. Three thucs they raised their bodies, swaying backward, then down again to the earth. After the third obelsance they rose to their feet, eying the strangers curiously, fearfully,

While the old chief launched into a lengthy aration, and as she watched the varying expressions upon their faces, it dawned upon Barbara that these might be, henceforth, the only human beings in her life! This appalling probability shocked her, as she realized it, with almost the effect of a sudden, reeling blow. Shuddering, she turned from the small dusky bodies and looked at Croft's fine physique His head was averted, his attention entirely engrossed by Chimabahol's gabbling speech.

Conscious of mental nausea, like one drowning, she clutched at the only remaining link with life-the companion destined to the same fate. For the first time in her life she called him by name, grasping his arm:

Quickly he turned, in astonishment. "We may never see any other human beings!" she graped.

With his usual swift penetration he understand, by the desperation in her volce and eyes, the overwhelming horrors raised by this thought. For a moment be besitated; then, pulling her hand down into his, he classed it close, saying nothing. At his reassuring touch the autor foreliness faded crafbally, as the autumn mists when the sun breaks through.

A sudden outborst of exultant cries reat the air. The lengthy ealogy came to an end at last. The pathetic relief in every swarthy breast manifested itself in wild trages and Jubilant shouts. Croft, like Mr. Micawher, was not slow in seizing an opportunity for cloquence. Italiang his free hand to command slience, he glibly recled all other dutter cananed to bim. It was he stated conflictly, the gods' dealer that he and his wife should live upon the island to assist the tribe correst against us, we could not carry in the recovery of its strength and

"They would have you to cultivate again the taro ident, which now is as a weed; weave much tapestry for your huts from the reeds; dry the stieed kernels of the cocount: cultivate the cotton seed. Then, perchance, when we remove to other lands, we shall send great ships bither with wondrous. gifts in return for the fruits of your toll" Further shouts arose. "The gods would have us to visit freely your habitations and show you how to prevent the pestilences which decour your numbers."

This program was vocifernusly acclaimed; but Croft's experience of natives was too wide to allow of reliance upon their momentary enthusiasm. Flashing a stern glance around, he awed them into sitence. "If all this is done pearefully," he continued, in threatening tones, "ye shall rest in safety. But it again your hands are lifted against us, your hodies shall be burned afresh with bine fire-devils. Your women shall be slain; year little ones thrown to the sharks! The wrath of your god will I bring down," waving his hand threat. coingly skyword, "and turn you into tertured slaves, if ever agoin re molest the great white chief or his wife."

Fear overawed the natives' enthusisen. They fell on their favor sesio, habiting ico-herently of ahedithre and merry. For the first time Barbara felt the businelly belied the repulsive extensi of those file the held out her tree band. The little fellow catter white loward it, but water our receptly pulled bim back; and she renembered with sound a memorine at that who was taken?

Accompanied by much muttering and scuffing, a man whose face was distinctly more intelligent than that of many of his fellows, slowly advanced. Croft watched him closely.

"Roowa!" cried Chimabahol, "where are Meaman and thy habe, that they obeyed not the command to greet the great white chief?" Many enger volces broke in, before he could reply.

"The babe is sick. O Chief!" "The scourge, O Chief! It is again in the house of Roown! Lef the great white chief save us from the scourge at the Sacrifice of the Full Moon to night-"

Roows uttered a great cry, and fell on his knees before Croft, eyes wild, arms outstretched, habbling protestations and pitiful supplications,

The white man fully realized the craftiness of these fellows, also the delicacy of his own position, with the necessity of causing no offense in this first action es overlord. His face set in its most determined, impenetrable lines; his eyes flashed round on all present, inspiring fear in the hearts of those upon whom they occasionally rested. Recognizing at last the man he sought, he motioned him forward, Larger than most, more brutal of

Like a sudden breeze rippling over group of poplars, a breath of fear swept across the Batening crowd. Babooms began a stream of gabbling protest: he was uniware of the stafalness of his action; he had not seen the great chief nor heard of his mission rom the gods; it was the Vow. . .

make the flames arise, straight and high! Thus shall we know that our sacrifice is accepted by our god."

The great white chief inclined his bend. Stepping forward with the suranch of one used to guiding sacrificial dames from childhood, he advanced to the altar, Barbara watching him in astonishment. There he paused for a solemn moment-whether to give the effect of reverence, or to grass. some clusive memory, or from wheer joy in the situation, she could not tell. . . Slowly, at last, he raised' his arms, waving the during torch highabove his head. Then he embarked! upon a short display of physical delli, as it invoking the spirits of an unseem host. It impressed the untives fato awestruck silence, while filling the girls with an almost irrepressible desire ter laugh. After this performance, he bentt slawly down and held his torch to the heap of dry sticks and leaves. Immedialely the fire caught on, crackling and fizzling, sending up leaping yellow flames and thick curling smoke into the somber enull above.

This instant and splendid conflagration was a sign of the offering being acceptable to Balhuaka. Another burst of excited incantation broke from the nesembly, the musicians once more blowing upon their reeds and shells, The torches flared, the bonfire bellied forth thick gusts of finnie and smoke, Its roar mingling with the music and wild singing.

At last the flames reached the sacrifice and the air was filled with the smell of burning food. A great shout went up. The god was even now enting of their offering! Health and prosperity would be theirs for at least the duration of this moon? The music abruptly ceased; the dancers sank breathless to the ground; asawed hush fell upon the gathering. When the fire had died down to at glowing heap of red embers, the aflence broke stormlly in an outberst of Joyous lillarity. The procession storted back to the settlement, the riotons merriment continuing all the was, the waring torches muling the moon seem tale by contrast.

At a small but on the outskirts Chimababol paused, intimuting that is was the best they could offer and would: in future be tabu to the great white chief. Then the revelers dispersed, the torches flickering like ministure firesamong the neighboring hots. The man and the girl were left alone.

The barbaric excitement still tingled in their veins and shone in their eyes, when, for a moment, they looked at each other. Instinctively Barbara caught her breath, putting her hand to her threat, as it to wrestle with something choking her; her torch fell to the ground.
